Digby County

Digby County is situated in the western end of Nova Scotia, on the Bay of Fundy. The county is composed of two municipal districts; the Municipality of the District of Clare in the western portion and the Muncipality of the District of Digby in the eastern portion.

The Municipality of Clare was first settled by the Acadians who were expelled from the province in 1755, but returned in a great pilgrimage in the summer of 1768. Digby Municipality was settled mainly by New England Loyalists. This group was led by Admiral Robert Digby who founded the town of Digby in 1784.

Due to the long coastline of the county and its proximity to good fishing grounds, wooden shipbuilding and fishing became the key activities in the early economy of the area. By 1879 there were 114 vessels sailing regularly from county ports, virtually all of these having been built locally. The turn of the century, however, brought the advent of the steel ship and the decline of the area's wooden boatbuilding industry. There were some notable, but short, revivals of the industry during the first and second World Wars.

The economy of the county today is highly dependent upon the fishery, both inshore and offshore. Processing plants provide significant employment, although part of this activity is seasonal. Several boat yards are located through the county, which are primarily engaged in building smaller boats for the inshore fishery. The Digby to Saint John, New Brunswick, ferry service provides speedy access for shipping fish and other products to markets and also brings numerous tourists through the county.

Due to the lack of legal or official boundaries, the Census is not always able to distinguish the population of these unincorporated places from that of the surrounding area.

The population totals shown in this report for 1976 and 1981 should thus be considered as approximations.

The cut-offs are based on size of family unit and population size of area of residence.
